

FINES AND FEES INDEX SOUTH DAKOTA

National Rank:

31st

Score:

27/100

In South Dakota and across the country, state and local governments impose fines as punishment for everything from traffic and municipal code violations to felonies. Courts then tax people with fees, surcharges, and other assessments that fund law enforcement, the court system, and other government operations. Fines and fees for even a single incident can add up to thousands of dollars. People unable to pay these sums immediately may face steep penalties, including additional fees, driver's license suspensions, revocation of voting rights, and even incarceration.

Fines and fees can keep people in a cycle of poverty, causing people to lose their jobs, their homes, and sometimes their children. The same monetary sanction that trivially inconveniences an affluent person can prevent a low-income family from paying the rent. But fines and fees are often set without regard to a person's financial situation. They create a two-tiered system, placing justice out of reach for many low-income people, including a disproportionate number of people of color.<sup>i</sup>

That is why the National Center for Access to Justice (NCAJ) based at Fordham Law School convened a task force of experts from around the country to identify best policies to rein in these abuses. In all, NCAJ identified 17 policies that are critical to creating a fairer system that does not criminalize poverty and respects the rights of litigants. NCAJ researched state and local laws in all 50 states and Washington, D.C. and graded the jurisdictions on a scale of 0 to 100 according to how their policies measure up, creating the Fines and Fees Justice Index. In short, no state did well. Only three states scored higher than 50 out of 100 and no state received a passing score.

The good news, however, is that almost every policy we track has been adopted by at least one state. That means that states need not invent good policies whole cloth. Rather, each state could implement more rights-respecting policies simply by looking to what other states are already doing.

This report provides a snapshot of how South Dakota fared on all 17 policy benchmarks — and sub-benchmarks — along with recommendations for how the state can improve access to justice. To see how all states scored on the Fines and Fees Justice Index, read about their policies, and see the methodology for how NCAJ arrived at the scores, visit the Fines and Fees Justice Index at <https://ncaj.org/state-rankings/fines-and-fees>.

South Dakota's Fines and Fees Justice Index Score

South Dakota scored 27 out of 100 points on the Fines and Fees Justice Index. It tied with Pennsylvania for 31st. Below, we explain in more detail how South Dakota fared on each of the Fines and Fees Justice Index benchmarks and we describe how it could do better.

Benchmark 1: Abolition of Fees

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 10 points

Recognizing that fees serve no role in making communities safer and that they unfairly force people who come into contact with the courts to pay for a system that serves all of society, the Justice Index sets a goal of abolishing all court fees. No state has yet abolished all court fees, but one in three has moved to abolish some of the most pernicious fees. These include fees for appointed counsel in criminal cases and fees for a person's incarceration, such as per diem "pay to stay" fees and charges for the cost of meals and other basic necessities. South Dakota imposes a range of fees, including fees for appointed counsel, fees for costs of incarceration, and parole supervision fees.<sup>ii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should abolish all fees. Short of that, it should abolish the most pernicious fees, including fees for appointed counsel, incarceration fees, and parole supervision fees.

Benchmark 2: Juvenile Court Fines and Fees

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 6 points

A growing body of research shows that juvenile court fines and fees, which require children or their families to pay when a child has contact with the juvenile courts, impede rehabilitation, increase recidivism, and can create family instability by placing financial stress on families already struggling to make ends meet. For that reason, a growing number of states are moving to abolish juvenile court fines and fees. South Dakota, however, imposes juvenile court fines and fees.<sup>iii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should abolish all juvenile court fines and fees, as Delaware, New Jersey, New Mexico and New York have done.

Benchmark 3: Barring Conflicts of Interest Around Fines and Fees Revenue

South Dakota Score: 6 out of 6 points

In many states, fines and fees pay for some or all of law enforcement and court system budgets. This use of the revenue can create perverse incentives, encouraging police to make more stops and arrests and court personnel to ratchet up punishments to pay their own salaries. South Dakota is one of four states that ensures that fines and fees revenues do not go directly into law enforcement or court budgets.<sup>iv</sup>

Recommendation: The state should continue the practice of ensuring that fines and fees revenues do not fund law enforcement or court budgets.

Benchmark 4: Private Collection of Fines and Fees Debt

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 3 points

Debt collection agencies often add large surcharges to bills they are collecting. Because they may only get paid when they collect money, debt collection agencies also have an incentive to use predatory practices to squeeze money from people who may not be able to afford it. When states allow private agencies to collect fines and fees, those agencies profit while people who cannot pay incur even more debt. For that reason, one in three states have either barred the use of private debt collection agencies to collect unpaid court debts or have taken steps to rein in abusive practices. South Dakota, however, still allows this practice.<sup>v</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should bar the use of private debt collection agencies to collect fines and fees.

Benchmark 5: Consideration of Ability to Pay at Sentencing

South Dakota Score: 1 out of 6 points

Recognizing the harms of charging people fines and fees they simply cannot afford to pay, one in four states require courts to conduct ability to pay assessments every time they order a person to pay a fine, fee, assessment or surcharge. South Dakota does not require courts to conduct ability to pay assessments when imposing fines, fees, or costs, but it received partial credit because at least one county (Minnehaha) requires such an inquiry.<sup>vi</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should require courts to conduct an ability to pay assessment every time they order a person to pay a fine, fee, assessment, or surcharge.

Benchmark 6: Proof of Willful Failure to Pay Before Incarceration or Other Sanctions

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 10 points

In 1983 the United States Supreme Court ruled in Bearden v. Georgia that courts cannot incarcerate a person for failure to pay court debts unless the failure to pay was "willful." Nevertheless, only 15 states require courts to conduct a hearing and find that the person's failure to pay was willful before ordering incarceration or the imposition of other sanctions, including the suspension of a driver's license. South Dakota does not require the state to prove that a person's failure to pay was willful before a judge imposes sanctions. Rather, it places the burden of proof on the person, who is required to show cause as to why they should not be imprisoned for failure to pay.<sup>vii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should abolish incarceration as a sanction for failure to pay. Short of that, the state should require the government to prove that a person's failure to pay was willful before ordering incarceration or imposing other sanctions.

Benchmark 7: Ability to Pay Standards

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 5 points

When courts conduct ability to pay determinations, they often do so without clear, uniform standards about how to conduct the proceedings, the evidence to consider, and the criteria to gauge what a person is able to pay. This can lead to wildly different results across court rooms, leaving many people unprotected. For that reason, 11 states have codified standards giving clear guidance to judges. South Dakota has not codified an ability to pay standard.<sup>viii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should codify a substantive ability to pay standard that all state and local courts must use so that there is consistency across the state in determining whether a person can afford to pay and, if so, how much.

Benchmark 8: Standards that Trigger a Presumption of Indigence

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 5 points

Eight states have codified standards that trigger a presumption that a person is indigent and, therefore, unable to pay fines, fees, costs, surcharges or assessments. In some states, the fact that a person is entitled to appointed counsel or receives public benefits is enough to trigger the presumption that they cannot pay fines and fees. In others, a certain income threshold triggers the presumption. South Dakota has not codified a standard that triggers a presumption of indigence.<sup>ix</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should codify a clear standard that triggers the presumption that a person is indigent and, therefore, cannot afford to pay fines or fees.

Benchmark 9: Discretion to Modify or Waive Fines and Fees

South Dakota Score: 8 out of 8 points

To ensure that fines and fees reflect what people can actually afford to pay, judges must have discretion in individual cases. Eighteen states give judges the ability to waive or modify all fines, fees, surcharges and assessments according to the person's ability to pay, and nearly every state give judges the ability to waive or modify these costs in at least some circumstances. South Dakota allows judges to convert fines, fees, and costs into community service.<sup>x</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should continue to give judges discretion to convert fines, fees and costs into community service. It should also give judges discretion to waive or modify all fines, fees, and costs.

Benchmark 10: Payment Plans

South Dakota Score: 1 out of 3 points

Bars on payment plans create needless barriers to payment for people who cannot pay an entire fine or fee up front, but some states never allow people to use payment plans. Others authorize—but do not require—judges to allow payment plans, leaving some people who cannot afford to pay upfront vulnerable. States should mandate that anyone can choose to pay fines and fees on a payment plan if they cannot afford to pay immediately, without incurring any additional fees or interest charges, but only five do so to date. South Dakota authorizes—but does not require—judges to allow people to pay fines and fees in installment plans. The state received partial credit because in Minnehaha County practice standards include judicial inquiry into whether a person can pay and whether a payment plan is necessary. No additional fees attach for entering into a payment plan.<sup>xi</sup>

Recommendation: As Minnehaha County has done, South Dakota should mandate that anyone can choose to pay fines and fees on a payment plan, without incurring any additional fees or interest charges.

Benchmark 11: Individualized Fines

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 3 points

To date, Oklahoma is the only state that has adopted individualized fines, sometimes referred to as “day fines.” Individualized fines, long used in Germany and other European countries, are scaled to the severity of the offense and the person’s income, helping to ensure that fines are adjusted to what people can afford to pay, and that people with greater income experience penalty of equivalent impact for violation of the same law.<sup>xii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should follow Oklahoma’s lead and institute day fines. Scaling fines not only to the severity of the person’s offense but also to their income helps to ensure that people who are poor or working class do not experience much harsher punishments for the same behavior as wealthy people who can afford to pay.

Benchmark 12: Right to Counsel When Incarceration is Possible

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 6 points

More than half of states give people the right to an attorney at court hearings if the person may face jail time for failure to pay a fine, fee, surcharge, or assessment. South Dakota does not provide a right to counsel in such hearings, but a person may request counsel if they can show that they do not have sufficient money or assets to hire counsel.<sup>xiii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should eliminate incarceration as a possible punishment for failure to pay. Short of that, the state should ensure that people have a right to counsel at any hearing where they might face jail time for failure to pay fines, fees, surcharges, assessments, or other costs.

Benchmark 13: Driver's License Suspension for Failure to Pay Fines and Fees

South Dakota Score: 5 out of 6 points

Eighty-six percent of Americans drive to work. A driver's license is also necessary to take children to school, buy groceries, go to doctor's appointments, and meet many other basic needs. But courts often suspend driver's licenses for failure to pay fines and fees, or for failure to appear at hearings connected with fines and fees payments, forcing people either to lose their jobs and face other hardships, or drive with a suspended license risking further penalties and punishments. For that reason, there is growing momentum to end the suspension of driver's licenses. Now, three in five states bar the suspension of driver's licenses for failure to pay fines and fees. South Dakota does not authorize the suspension of driver's licenses for failure to appear, but it received only partial credit because it does authorize the suspension of driver's licenses for failure to pay in some driving-related cases.<sup>xiv</sup>

Recommendation: As it has done with failure to appear, South Dakota should eliminate the practice of suspending driver's licenses for failure to pay, including in driving-related cases.

Benchmark 14: Voting Rights

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 6 points

During the Jim Crow era, states passed laws designed to prevent Black people from voting, including poll taxes. There is no defensible good government nexus between money and voting. Today, however, a form of poll tax still exists. In many states, people lose the right to vote when they are convicted of a felony. Almost half of states block people from restoring their voting rights unless and until they pay all fines and fees. South Dakota bars people with felony convictions from voting until they have completed probation and parole, which may in turn depend on paying fines and fees.<sup>xv</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota must eliminate this modern poll tax. The state should restore to people the fundamental right to vote, regardless of whether they have outstanding fines and fees.

Benchmark 15: Conditioning Expungement on the Payment of Fines and Fees

South Dakota Score: 6 out of 6 points

One in three people in the United States has a criminal record, which can interfere with a person's ability to find a job, rent or buy a home, enroll in higher education, access government benefits and more. Some criminal records can be sealed from public view or removed through expungement, making it easier for people to get back on their feet after satisfying a criminal sentence. One in four states allows people to expunge or seal their records notwithstanding that they have unpaid fines and fees. South Dakota does not condition expungement or sealing of records on the payment of fines and fees.<sup>xvi</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should expand access to expungement and record sealing, and it should continue its practice of allowing people to expunge records if they have outstanding fines and fees.

Benchmark 16: Data Transparency

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 6 points

To understand the magnitude of the problem and to identify solutions, it is critical for states to collect and publicize data about fines and fees, including the totals that state and local governments assess and actually collect; fines and fee amounts imposed, broken down by race and ethnicity, age, gender, and income level; and number of people incarcerated for failure to pay. South Dakota does not publish any such data.<sup>xvii</sup>

Recommendation: South Dakota should collect and report data about fines and fees, including amounts imposed—broken down by race and ethnicity, age, gender, and income level—as well as revenue collected. It should also collect and report on the number of people incarcerated for failure to pay.

Benchmark 17: Temporary Measures to Mitigate the of Fines and Fees During the COVID-19 Pandemic

South Dakota Score: 0 out of 5 points

The COVID-19 pandemic and resulting economic fallout caused financial hardship across our society. Early in the crisis, tens of millions of people lost their jobs. Although employment numbers gradually improved, the challenges persisted. Near the end of 2021, 20 million households reported that they did not have enough to eat and 10 million households reported that they were behind on rent.<sup>xviii</sup> Almost half of states took steps to change their fines and fees policies in light of these new economic circumstances. South Dakota did not change its policies on fines and fees to respond to the economic hardships people were suffering at the beginning of the pandemic.<sup>xix</sup>

Recommendation: The COVID-19 pandemic and its financial toll revealed many ways society could be operating differently, including in practices around fines and fees. In anticipation of future pandemic surges and other potential challenges, including financial hardships, South Dakota should continue to review and reform its policies on fines and fees, guided by the benchmarks set forth above.

Conclusion

The overall findings of the Fines and Fees Justice Index are sobering. No state received a passing score. The findings do, however, provide some room for optimism. Almost all of the 17 benchmarks have been adopted by at least one state. That means that states need not reinvent the wheel. To implement better, more rights-respecting policies, in most cases they need only look to what other states are already doing.
